

Affordable IT Training For City of Los Angeles' Reduced Budget

The City of Los Angeles experienced an IT budget reduction, and couldn't afford to continue with the training they had been using. They needed a more affordable solution that didn't compromise on training quality.

They came to CBT Nuggets requesting a solution to keep their IT staff trained, at a price that wouldn't break their limited budget.

Our solution was a Nugget Archive Server IT training video library, with licensing to support 10 concurrent users. This licensing model allows the entire staff access to the training for a fixed cost, permitting viewing by up to 10 users at once. The training content is updated regularly, giving the staff fresh and up-to-date courseware, at no additional cost.

The training server was installed to their network, putting it at their fingertips for whenever questions came up. All staff needs to do is connect to the server, select the video that fits their particular problem, and watch it from their computer screen.

With the training broken into 30-minute, topic-focused videos, it's easy to find the training they need, watch it, then immediately apply that knowledge on the job. Plus, the topic-focused videos allow them to save time by only training on the subject they need to learn today, and by doing training when it's convenient for them.

And the most important benefit—the Nugget Archive Server from CBT Nuggets meets the City of Los Angeles' need for reliable IT training on a reduced budget.
